CLIPPINGS FROM THE PACIFIC FISHERMAN

Volcanoes in Western Alaska were reported early last month again showing signs of activity but later dispatches received indicated the reports sent broadcast over the country were greatly exaggerated.
A fall of ashes was reported in the Bristol bay district but it was not sufficient to interfere with fishing as was the case last year.

***
The month of June witnessed a drop of nearly 2,000,000 pounds in the Seattle halibut receipts as compared with May while prices showed a marked improvement. The middle of June from 6 to 6 3-4 cents a pound was received for the farms but by the end of the month they had again declined to 4 cents. The total catch for the month would undoubtedly have exceeded that of June 1912 but halibut fishermen's strike with affected the larger independent vessels kept these tied up the first ten days of June. This redounded to the benefit of the smaller schooners who were able to secure a better price for their catches than would otherwise have been the case. As it was the month of June bore a striking resemblance to the same month last year in market conditions.
The total catch was 4,283,000 pounds—only several hundred thousand pounds more than June 1912. The average price was 4.4 cents as compared with 4.2 cents in 1912.

Capt. Simon Brunn of the steamship Northland last month reported to the U. S. hydrographic office at Port Townsend regarding the discovery of an uncharted bay on Baranof island and the heretofore unexplored channel which divides the San Lorenzo islands in Southeastern Alaska.
The Toledo Fish Co., which is operating a mild curing plant aboard the Northland, is located in the bay.

The Revilla Fish Products Co., which has a cannery in Southeastern Alaska, will open a sales office in Seattle this month. W. Wurzburg, of the company, returned early in June from a trip to Ketchikan and since then has had temporary quarters in the office of G. F. Schloetelborg.
